Japanese Creative Project Design Company Superstation Joins Cyberport

Expanding the vibrant digital tech ecosystem with inspiring innovation

Hong Kong, 1 March 2019 – As the flagship for Hong Kong digital tech industry, Cyberport is committed to expanding its ecosystem and recruiting global tech talents and companies to bolster the development of the innovation and technology industry. Superstation International Ltd, the Hong Kong branch of Superstation Inc., a Japanese creative project design company, has officially established foothold at Cyberport to further enrich the community ecosystem.

The opening reception was held on Wednesday (27 Feb) and officiated by Dr David Chung, Under Secretary for Innovation and Technology, Takuya Nomura, Chief Executive Officer of Superstation International Ltd, and Eric Chan, the Chief Public Mission Officer of Cyberport.

Superstation offers creative project development and consultancy services to its clients and has worked with the Japanese government on a number of large-scale projects. One of its signature projects is "Knowledge Capital" in Osaka – an innovative hub comprising about 100 companies, universities and research institutes to create new and innovative ideas through the exchange of knowledge. It inspires visitors with different technology-led activities including interaction with robots, electric sports car experience and 3D showcase of famous paintings, creative business matching fair and more. It offers one-stop tourism, shopping and learning experiences.

"Knowledge Capital" has been a close partner of Cyberport. Thanks to its support, three Cyberport's incubatees - EventXtra, an event management software developer; MyLamStudio, a multimedia production studio and educational gamer XNT have successfully landed in Japan.

Takuya Nomura, CEO of Superstation International Ltd, said, "Hong Kong boasts a strong locational advantage. Through the establishment of the Hong Kong branch, we hope to further strengthen our links with the Hong Kong I&T community. Superstation and Cyberport share the same value of cultivating talents and fostering development of new economy industries. We believe that the robust ecosystem of Cyberport will help Superstation to further develop its business and connect to new partners to explore the global market."

Eric Chan, Chief Public Mission Officer of Cyberport, welcomed Superstation to Cyberport community. "Cyberport is an innovative digital community with over 1,200 start-ups and technology companies. The addition of Superstation not only enriches the diverse creative ecosystem of Cyberport, its cutting-edge concept and business model is of great value to our start-ups and technology companies in the community. We look forward to establishing a closer relationship with Superstation. I am also pleased to see more and more potential start-ups settling in Cyberport to strengthen Hong Kong's role as a digital technology hub and jointly promote the development of innovation and technology.
